Freelance part-time job opportunity for speakers of Catalan

We are looking for native speakers of Catalan to help us localise our product.

what3words is a global addressing company that has given every 3m square on the planet an address of 3 random words – for example, our London office is located at ///filled.count.soap. what3words addresses are more accurate than street addresses or postcodes, but much easier to remember and communicate than 16 digit lat-long coordinates. Please see the map at https://what3words.com/ and click the light bulb in the bottom left corner of the page to learn more.

Please watch this TED talk from our co-founder and CEO, Chris Sheldrick: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=a4ZBzM3L6ws and read a little more about our work with emergency services around the world: https://what3words.com/what3words-for-emergencies-real-life-stories/

We are currently working to launch a Catalan version of our map, so that every 3m square across the globe will have a unique what3words address in your language. The job focuses on two main areas:

1) making sure that the best, most common words in your language are used, and
2) making sure that no unsuitable words appear in the what3words addresses.

No specific qualifications are required, although you must be a native speaker of the language and be confident in your writing and spelling skills! It is helpful if you are passionate about language and/or technology, and you must be able to communicate confidently in English.

If you are interested, please apply online at https://apply.workable.com/what3words/j/1BB74B5C12/
Before applying, familiarise yourself with our website and explore our map. When applying, tell us what you think of what3words, including an example of when you think it may be useful for you. You will also be asked to upload a copy of your CV.
